Hi

I have a particular concern with the general aspects of information discrimination.

I have read what I thought was the relevant sections relating to the integration of ICT within the State Health System but could find no mention of access requirements or consultation and co-design with people with disabilities.

This is concerning on two levels;

- Without an accessible ICT system, employment opportunities for visually impaired people is effectively eliminated which is in contravention of the intent of the National Disability Strategy.
- Without an accessible ICT system, patients are not able to be self-empowered and take full advantage of technologies like telehealth.

Are these aspects to be addressed?

Thanks

John Stevens
